Director A Venkatesh's latest Tamil film Maanja Velu comes just after his acting debut in Angaadi Theru. His excellent performance as the sadistic showroom supervisor Karungali Venkatesh was appreciated by fans and critics alike. So, will Maanja Velu erase that image of Venkatesh? An action movie, it has a simple storyline. Or, at least that's what is being revealed at the moment.

Arun Vijay, an actor who was written off after several of his films flopped, hopes for a comeback of sorts with Maanja Velu. The movie sees him shaving his head at the temple town of Palani and praying for help to patch things up with his elder brother played by Karthik, who returns to the big screen after a six-year hiatus.

"Although I was initially apprehensive about going bald, the director convinced me that it would create a great impact. Also, I knew this look had worked wonders in the past for many stars, including Rajinikanth in Sivaji," says Vijay.

Now, what exactly does the title mean? Maanja is a string coated with a paste of ground glass and other ingredients, used to fly kites and cut off rival kites. Venkatesh says this describes the basic plot of the film. "If you are careless, the string can cut you."

Incidentally there were many "cutting" incidents during the shoot. Vijay was hurt while performing a stunt in Chennai's Binny Mill and was hospitalised. Interestingly, this accident was captured on camera and forms the backdrop for the rolling credits.

Maanja Velu sees Prabhu in a guest role, Anu Haasan (Kamal Hassan's niece) in a pivotal role and Dhanishka as Vijay's lover.

Shot in several cities, the movie has two songs filmed in Bangkok. But Venkatesh is tight-lipped about these shoots and isn't willing to divulge the cost of the shoot or even tell us whether these songs form part of a dream sequence or not.
